By Wole Oyebade

HOUSE of Representatives' appeal to foreign airlines to reopen cheaper layers of fares for the Nigerian market, while trapped funds are being resolved, has gone unheeded – and much to the pains of international travellers this festive season.

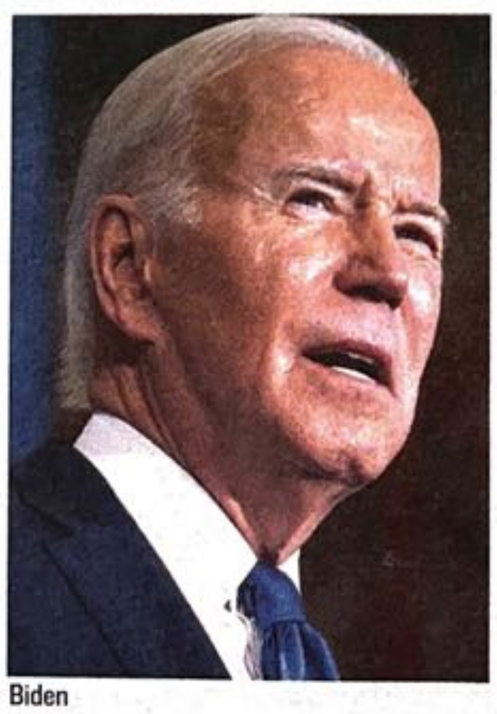

Indeed, more airlines are offering only premium fares to intending travellers buying in the country. Comparatively, the premiums cost about 200 per cent higher than average fares, whether on Economy or Business Class cabins.

The implication is that a six-hour Economy Class ticket that erstwhile sold for an average of
